invertebrate immune responses have interested scientists for decades, from the first relevant observation by E. Metchnikoff in 1882, who discovered phagocytosis while studying starfish larvae. Invertebrate immunology first began to be appreciated as an important field in Invertebrate Ecological Immunology - cs.unm.edu Invertebrates are attractive subjects for study because of the simple mechanisms underpinning their in-nate immune systems [a system that is being studied with renewed interest in vertebrates (9)] and their amenability to physiological manipulations in the context of life history and ecology. Costs A central tenet of
